Orange persons are action oriented. They are highly resourceful and can sell a product, an idea, or a project in a way no other color type can. However, their lack of interest in administrative details and follow-through makes them the target of blame and criticism within an organization. When striking out on their own, they must have someone to follow-through if they are to be successful. When the Oranges need excitement and their promotional talents are used to constructive ends, they are most productive. However, if these energies are not channeled correctly, destructive and anti-social activities will result.

Confining rules, regulations, and day-to-day routines are deadly to Orange. They seek excitement in a job above all else.
